

FOURTH INDUSTRIAL MASTER PLAN

NIMP 2030 A 'WHOLE OF NATION EFFORT'

Expert says govt, industry players and the people must play their roles to achieve its targets

ADIB POVERA
KUALA LUMPUR
news@nst.com.my

THE success of the New Industrial Master Plan 2030 (NIMP 2030) requires not only government commitment but also the involvement of industry players and the public, an economist said.

Professor Tan Sri Noor Azlan Ghazali said all ministries, government agencies, industry players and the public must understand their roles to ensure the fourth industrial master plan achieved its targets and goals.

"It is important for everyone to realise that the success of NIMP 2030 does not depend on the Investment, Trade, and Industry Ministry.

"This is not a plan to develop the ministry, but rather a plan to develop industries in the country.

"From the beginning, the nature of NIMP 2030 is that it adopts a 'whole-of-nation' approach, which requires a collective effort," he said in a social media post.

Noor Azlan, a professor of finance at Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia and a member of the NIMP 2030 special team, also stressed the importance of mobilising and executing the plan's implementation, as well as ensuring proper monitoring.

NIMP 2030 aims to revitalise the country's manufacturing sector and increase its value-added turnaround to RM587.5 billion by 2030.

It was unveiled by Prime Minister Datuk Seri Anwar Ibrahim on Friday.

Anwar, who is also the finance minister, has said NIMP 2030 was the key component of the unity government's Madani Economy: Empowering the People framework.

He said NIMP 2030, which would cost RM95 billion in investments over its period of implementation, was expected to generate new jobs for 3.3 million people by 2030.

NIMP 2030 outlined four missions: advance economic complexity, tech up for a digitally vibrant nation, strive for a net-zero future, and safeguard economic security and inclusivity.

These missions will be supported by four enablers: mobilising the financing ecosystem, fostering talent development and attraction, strengthening the best-in-class investor journey for ease of doing business and introducing a whole-of-nation governance framework.

Professor Tan Sri
Noor Azlan Ghazali